MATT JUUL, NATIONAL FEATURES EDITOR

For a brief window in time between the scorching heat of summer and the awful, snow-filled months of winter, New England transforms into a magical place to visit for anyone who loves to watch the leaves change. The region is like a painting come to life, as the beautiful colors brighten up the landscape from the coast of Connecticut all the way up to the mountains of Maine. Now that autumn has arrived, we've put together a nifty guide to experiencing the best of fall foliage throughout New England.

5 Ways to experience fall foliage in New England

Your ultimate guide to leaf peeping this season.

MATT JUUL

ISTOCK

While living in New England can be rough during the dreaded winter months, shoveling all that snow seems worth it after experiencing the magic of fall.

The region turns into wonderland for leaf-peeping enthusiasts each season, as the beautiful colors of autumn overtake each state, from the highways of Connecticut to the mountains of Maine. Now that the fall-foliage season is in full swing, here's how to make the most of it in New England.

Set sail

A cruise trip may not be the first activity that comes to mind when thinking about fall foliage, but it is a great way to experience the best of autumn in New England. The Classic Harbor Line Boston's fall foliage brunch cruise will set sail again this fall beginning Oct. 13, and run through Nov. 11. Guests will get a chance to see amazing views while enjoying a tasty three-course brunch ($70 per adult) aboard a 1920s-style motor yacht.

Take a hike

If you want an up-close-and-personal view of fall foliage this season, there's no shortage of amazing hiking spots and trails to choose from in New England. Head to Maine for the Fore River Sanctuary, a gorgeous 85-acre preserve that's also home to Portland's only natural waterfall, Jewell Falls. For a scenic spot closer to home, check out the Bay State's own Mohawk Trail State Forest, which covers nearly 6,000 acres. Swing by the trail in Pittsfield on Sept. 30 to celebrate the season with the 63rd Fall Foliage Parade. And if you're in the Connecticut area, check out the Appalachian Trail for amazing fall foliage views along the Housatonic River.

Hit the road

If you're looking for a scenic drive through some of the region's top spots for fall foliage, we've got a few recommendations for you. The Moosehead Lake region of Maine is a picturesque area that's perfect for a weekend leaf peeping drive. Maine's Acadia Loop Road is a beautiful drive as well, featuring amazing views of the mountains and the sea. New Hampshire's Kancamagus Highway is another great spot to enjoy the season, offering miles and miles of foliage to see along the White Mountain National Forest.

Close to home

You don't need to leave Boston to experience the best of fall foliage in New England. Luckily, the city is filled with awesome spots to go leaf peeping, including the iconic Public Garden, the Common, as well as along the Esplanade.

Best of the best

If you're wondering why we haven't mentioned Vermont yet, it's because the state is widely regarded as the best spot for fall foliage in the region, if not the country. From the Green Mountains near Smugglers' Notch to the hills of Stowe, you really can't go wrong no matter where you are in the state.

Yvonne Orji talks 'Insecure,' 'Night School' and keeping an eye on the prize

We caught up with the actress and comedian before her appearance at this year's Forbes Under 30 Summit.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Yvonne Orji has made a name for herself with her breakout role playing Issa Rae's best friend, Molly Carter, on the hilarious HBO show "Insecure." But the actress and comedian is striving to become more of a household name: She can be seen starring alongside such comedic heavyweights as Kevin Hart and Tiffany Haddish in the new comedy "Night School."

Born to Nigerian immigrant parents, Yvonne Orji could have taken a much different path: She has a master's degree in public health and was on track to spend her days working in the corporate world. Orji will be speaking at this year's Forbes Under 30 Summit alongside John Kerry, Anthony Scaramucci and Olympic skater Adam Rippon. We caught up with her ahead of her appearance to talk about how important it is to keep your eye on the prize.

How excited are you to be speaking at this year's Forbes Under 30 Summit in Boston?
I'm actually very excited! I never made the list because, obviously, I'm over 30. But it was one of those things that I looked at and was so inspired by all of the things that people were doing. I was kind of a late bloomer. I didn't figure out that I wanted to switch careers until I was like 25 after I got my master's. The journey takes a long time. I didn't get my first big break until I was 31 or 32. To see what young people are doing is so inspiring for me, and then having the opportunity, even though I didn't make the list, to impart any wisdom that I've learned on the journey onto them is kind of like a full circle moment for me.

You got your master's in public health at George Washington University before pursuing your career as a stand-up and an actress. How were you able to keep your eye on the prize early on?
I've got to just say that it was fate. The only way I could stand up to my very African immigrant parents was to be like "this is a God-given dream." I was like, "I have no idea how I'm going to do it." It looks crazy. I have a lot of debt from student loans and still it was like "this is something I've got to do." It was only because I felt like the force and ammunition was behind me to keep going. Also, I think because of my immigrant upbringing, we were taught to never accept no and to just keep going in the face of adversity. So for me, it was failure is not an option. I don't know what that means. If I fail, then what went wrong and how do you fix that? That's kind of what kept me going.

To know that this is not something that you can do just on a whim. Like "let me just try jokes.'"(Laughs) Because if you fail, you're failing an entire country that is rooting for you and expecting you to succeed because they've sacrificed so much for you to come to America! I think for me, some people look at that weight and crumble underneath it. But, I looked at that weight and looked at it as motivation to keep going. Your mom didn't fail when she came over here with four kids, a full-time job, and got her masters in nursing. No. She did it. So, I think you can too! You have no kids. No mortgage. You have no excuse!

It seems like your drive to succeed is pretty similar to your character Molly on "Insecure." Did you see those similarities when you read those first scripts?

Absolutely. One of the breakdowns for the role is that she is able to switch between corporate America and being an "around-the-way-girl." I was like '" know this chick." I know her very well. Because I was in corporate America. I worked for a nonprofit after graduation and then I worked in Liberia. I know what it was like to be driven and also what it was like to be the only brown face in an organization that helped a lot of brown people. So — speaking to Issa's nonprofit "We Got Y'all" and Molly's place in the workplace — you want to get ahead and you want to get to do the things that you aspire to do, but there may be some roadblocks that you can't avoid. She can't avoid being brown. So it's like "how do I show myself as an asset and valuable?" That's something that I've had to do not only in entertainment, but in corporate America.

GETTY

It seems like an issue that Molly is facing this season is being able to find her voice at her new law firm. You star in the new film "Night School" alongside Kevin Hart and Tiffany Haddish. How hard was it to let your comedic voice be heard over two of the biggest comedic personalities in the world right now?

Here's where Molly and I differ. Molly is like "I need to find my voice at all cost." What Yvonne does is like "Whose voice is supposed to be the loudest voice right now? Let's let that voice be the lead and then find your moments to let your voice be heard in the best way." Sometimes, it's not the voice that's the loudest that gets heard. Maybe the voice that's kind of muted or comes in at a point when the loud voices are out-talking each other. You can come in and be like (in a tiny voice) "Hey guys, I have an idea." For me, in "Night School," it was very much an understanding of I know who the major players are. I know who's vehicle this is. I know what I bring to the table, and in this moment, I don't need to be anything but what I've been brought to the table for. I think Molly is struggling to figure that out. She wants to shine at all cost. Sometimes, just because the light isn't on you, that doesn't mean you're not shining. I think that's what Molly doesn't understand yet and in a way she is sabotaging herself.

Are you working on anything else right now? Will you be doing more standup?

I am actually going to be doing the New York Comedy Festival this November. I have like five shows at Caroline's on Broadway. I have a podcast called "Jesus and Jollof" that's doing really well. I do it with a really good friend of mine named Luvvie Ajayi. It's just kind of taken off like gangbusters! We're one season in.

I'm pitching and writing. I have this show "First Gen" that David Oyelowo and Harpo are also executive producers on. For me, it's having all of the kettles and pots on the stove and just trying to figure out which one is going to boil first, which one still needs to simmer, what do I need to put in a crockpot? Just keep creating! I'm working on a book right now that I'm very excited about and very excited to share once that's done. Yeah. Lots of things!

Catch Yvonne Orji in "Night School" in theaters Friday, Sept.28 and in the season finale of "Insecure" on HBO Sept. 30 at 10:30 p.m. For tickets to the Forbes Under 30 Summit head over to Forbes.com.

Joan Jett on #MeToo and her 'Bad Reputation'

Joan Jett's new documentary hits theaters this weekend.

The Godmother of Punk talks about the movement and more as her new documentary hits theaters. GREGORY WAKEMAN

It's interesting to look back at the reaction Joan Jett and the Runaways provoked when they originally burst onto the music scene.

The male-dominated media didn't know what to do or how to react to the all-female teenage rock band's confrontational and proudly sexual aesthetic and music. It's not that Cherie Currie, Lita Ford, Sandy West, Jackie Fox and Joan Jett were doing anything different to the likes of the Rolling Stones, Kiss or David Bowie, though. It's that they were young women.

The reaction looks particularly misogynistic in the current climate, where the #MeToo and #TimesUp movements have shaken up the patriarchy.

Ahead of the release of her new documentary "Bad Reputation," Joan Jett tells Metro that she sees a link between her groundbreaking start in the music industry and what's going on today.

"I totally see a link. It is pervasive," says Jett. "I think pretty much every woman has some kind of experience in a #MeToo situation. There are so many you can't really go into it. Or remember them all."

But while Jett sees a link, she doesn't believe that enough has changed when it comes to female equality.

"I don't see a big shift since The Runaways days. Things have not changed that much. It might look different," she says. "Women are in powerful positions, there are more women in more powerful positions. But it still to me is a lot of window dressing.

"Until women are in real positions of power, where they yield the money and make decisions about where the money goes," Jett adds. "Then we will have a more equitable playing field. It is still difficult turf. But that's life. What are you gonna do?"

But while Jett's place in musical history has long been certain, what did she originally want to achieve when she founded the Runaways at the age of 17, back in 1975?

"We wanted to make it not strange for girls or women to play rock 'n' roll. What we were really trying to say was that girls could do anything outside of the boundaries that had been set," says Jett. "We wanted to be the female Rolling Stones. We wanted to play rock 'n' roll, and rock 'n' roll is very sexual in its very nature. If women or girls are singing rock 'n' roll it is sexual.

"We don't have to sing about sex for it to be sexual. I certainly see in America, America has problems with girls speaking about sex in general. Especially with teenage girls, then the conversation stops," she adds. "But teenage girls have these feelings. Teenage girls get horny. I'm sorry, but they do. So to obliterate that whole aspect of a woman when she is younger is really disrespectful."

Jett admits that she "didn't see this at the time, but reflecting on it is a natural thing. It shouldn't be so uncomfortable to talk about. But it was.

"The media just wanted to hear outrageous stories. We were a rock 'n' roll band so we had all of those things. But to focus on that aspect beyond the music was kind of juvenile," says Jett. "If you opened that door you were screwed. I could tell at that young age I was naive about everything, especially how people go about tricking you into talking about that stuff.

"I got that at the time," she adds. "I knew that if I started talking about sex now in the context of our music then that is all we would ever get. Nothing would be about the music. Not that it was anyway."

"What we were really trying to say was that girls could do anything outside of the boundaries that had been set."

Faculty and students from Berklee will be there to conduct the KidsJam, an array of musical education activities geared towards getting the young ones interested in music. An "instrument petting zoo" will be there as well so kids (and adults) can some hands on experiences with all the different instruments.

When is it?
This year's fest will take over Columbus Avenue on Sept. 29, from noon to 6 p.m.

How to get there
The Beantown Jazz Festival is a pretty big affair, so it will take over Columbus Avenue, west of Massachusetts Avenue, for six blocks up to Burke Street. Expect those areas to be closed to traffic or significantly affected due to the festivities. For those taking public transportation to the fest, the Massachusetts Avenue stop on the Orange Line and the Symphony stop on the Green Line are just short walks to all the action.

WAIT LIST CLOSING: The Weinberg House at 132 Chestnut Hill Avenue, Brighton, MA, will no longer be accepting housing applications for the rental-assisted units at 30% of Area Median Income, as the approximate wait for a unit is anticipated to be greater than five years. We are still accepting applications for the Wait List for units designated for the Low Income Housing Tax Credit program. This includes applicants whose annual income is at least $26,000, and below the current 60% Area Median Income limits. This also includes qualified applicants with mobile housing vouchers. Interested persons must be at least 62 years old; and may inquire at the JCHE Rental Office at 40 Wallingford Road, Brighton, MA, or call 617-912-8421, or email MSheynberg@jche.org.

The "Chappelle's Show" co-creator and "Daily Show" star is ready for his first Boston performance.

Neal Brennan has never performed in Boston before; the closest he's come over the years have been shows in New Haven and Providence.

"I don't what happened," Brennan tells Metro. "It was an oversight."

While Thursday's show at Royale will mark his first gig in the Hub, the 44-year-old comedy veteran does have a bit of a Boston connection. Well, sort of. Brennan's first job in comedy was at the now-closed Boston Comedy Club in Greenwich Village when he was a student at New York University. There, he struck up friendships with a number of comics who would go on to be stars, including the one-and-only Dave Chappelle. Brennan proved his comedy chops by feeding them jokes to try — even though he was just a kid.

"I would give people punch lines for their acts, like, 'Hey try this, try that,'" Brennan says. "I was 18. I was kind of a know-it-all, but I had no business doing that at all."

Brennan has grown quite a bit since those days, going on to create "Chappelle's Show" and write "Half Baked" with his longtime pal, as well as serve as a writer, director and performer for everything from "All That" and "Kenan & Kel" to "Inside Amy Schumer" and "The Daily Show with Trevor Noah." When he's not working on his stand-up or other projects, Brennan continues to help comics with their punch lines, consulting for big names like Chris Rock and Ellen DeGeneres.

"I still do the same thing. Now it's just for money," Brennan jokes.

Although Chappelle and Rock have radically different styles than DeGeneres, Brennan doesn't alter his approach to get inside each comedian's head. "I don't see it as 'this is a Chris joke, this is a Dave joke, this is an Ellen joke.'" The Pennsylvania native admits, though, that each comic does tend to cover specific topics when they're on stage.

"Subject-wise, if you're talking about Dave or Chris, it's more, generally speaking, sociological or gender or race," he says. "With Ellen, it's just very observational."

"I'm probably a combo of both," Brennan adds, noting that his own stand-up work tends to fall into more of the Rock and Chappelle territory, as he "likes jokes about issues."

As for what inspires Brennan in the world of comedy these days, he's just looking for something original to stand out from all the noise. His recent Netflix special "3 Mics" is a testament to that, as Brennan used three different mic stands for the performance, one dedicated to reading jokes off index cards, another to talk about his personal issues and the third for more traditional stand-up comedy.

"More than anything, the thing that's inspiring me is, how do you stand out," says Brennan. "I didn't want to just be confident for an hour, or glib."

This focus on originality is why he loves Hannah Gadsby's special "Nanette," which has earned a ton of acclaim, as well as backlash from some in the comedy sphere who don't view it as stand-up, since much of the performance deals with heavy issues that resonate in the #MeToo era. Brennan claims that he's been a fan of "Nanette" for a while, having seen the show live over the spring and written a lengthy Instagram post in support of it. Brennan even offered to pass along a link of the special to DeGeneres for Gadsby after seeing it.

"I'm a big fan of it," says Brennan. "I didn't feel very threatened by it. I think that's probably the main adjective people feel like.

"I had people call me like, 'So do I have to be sad now?'" he adds. "No, dummy, you don't have to be sad now. Just do your thing."

Brennan believes that the art of comedy is open to all kinds of interpretations. The key is to "just do something interesting.

"Do whatever you want," says Brennan. "If you have an idea, do the idea.

"I thought 'Nanette' was great, and I don't say that in a pandering way," he adds. "I've got the Instagrams to prove it."

Taurus Turn the way you feel about something or someone into an opportunity. Pay a visit or set up a meeting and voice your opinion and intentions.

Gemini It's good to communicate, but before you pass on information, make sure you have your facts right and your motives straight, or someone will be quick to correct you.

Cancer You can make a difference if you reach out and help someone. Those going through a difficult time will be grateful and eager to return the favor.

Leo Sit tight and wait your turn. If you try to force others to do things your way, you'll face opposition. Use your intelligence and charm to get your way.

Virgo Get involved in events or hobbies that will broaden your sense of awareness and lead to interesting encounters with individuals who have something to offer you.

Libra Emotional issues will confuse you. Consider what you are missing out on and what you need to do to get back in the game. Focus on closure and forward motion.

Scorpio A change of heart may come as a surprise to you or someone close to you. Don't let anger set in when common sense and will lead to a positive outcome.

Sagittarius Look for new opportunities. Fill out applications or set up interviews with prospective job agencies. Find new ways to use your skills and promote what you have to offer.

Capricorn Don't disregard someone making derogatory remarks that could hurt your reputation. Set the record straight and keep moving forward.

Aquarius Handle your assets carefully. Make an affordable investment that will help you gain greater financial stability. Don't make a snap decision based on an exaggeration.

Pisces If you change the way you do things, new opportunities will come your way. An encounter with someone from your past will spark new ideas. Romance is on the rise. EUGENIA LAST

Here's how people in Boston and beyond are reacting to the Dunkin' name change

The company announced it's officially going by just Dunkin' and people have a lot of thoughts about the change.

DUNKIN'
Dunkin' makes it official: It's dropping 'Donuts' from its logo
After months of testing a possible change, Dunkin' Brands is finally ditching the word donuts from the coffee chain's branding.
cnbc.com

In case you somehow missed the news, Dunkin' Donuts as we know it is no more.

Don't worry, the beloved Massachusetts-based chain isn't going anywhere. It announced that it's officially dropping the "Donuts" (from the name, not the menu) and going by just Dunkin.

Bostonians shouldn't be so shocked at the name change, since the company did test it out locally first before unrolling it nationwide. Still, the coffee shop formerly known as Dunkin' Donuts has been a staple here for decades, so naturally, New Englanders had some specific thoughts about the news.

Some New Englanders reacted to the shortened name not because they want to keep the original, full "Dunkin' Donuts" name, but because they've already been shortening the name themselves for years.

Of course, since America runs on Dunkin', people from all over jumped into the conversation about the name change. Here's a look at some other jokes in the wake of the news.

The folks at Dunkin' explained that the new name is "simpler, shorter and more modern," and alludes to the variety of their offerings, beyond the doughnut. There's also another, even shorter version, "DNKN'" that will appear on some packaging.

"For almost 70 years, America has been running on Dunkin'," Tony Weisman, Dunkin' chief marketing officer, explained in a blog post. "During that time we have built a strong relationship with our guests — a relationship similar to the ones people have with their friends. It's time we take our relationship with our guests to the next level. We're now moving to a first-name basis with America! And, as a matter of fact, with the world."

The new moniker will appear on Dunkin' packaging, advertising, website and social media channels beginning in January 2019. All new and remodeled Dunkin' Donuts locations will get the new Dunkin' logo on their signage, as well.

First Baker-Gonzalez debate in race for Mass. gov. set for Oct. 9

In less than two weeks, Bay Staters will be able to watch the first of three gubernatorial debates as incumbent Charlie Baker faces Democratic challenger Jay Gonzalez in the race for governor of Massachusetts.

The first gubernatorial debate is scheduled for Oct. 9, with WBZ-TV host Jon Keller as moderator.

That gubernatorial debate will be televised at 8 p.m. and could provide a potential turning point for Gonzalez, experts say, as he has been trailing behind in Baker in the polls and suffering from low name recognition.

According to a WBUR poll out Wednesday, 45 percent of responders said they had never heard of Gonzalez. That level of name recognition persists among his own party as well, with 37 percent of Democrats saying they hadn't heard of Gonzalez either.

Baker has served as governor of Massachusetts since 2015, earning the title of "most popular governor" in the country more than once since assuming office. Voters seem inclined to give him four more years in the role, with 68 percent of poll respondents saying they'd vote for Baker if the election were held today, per the WBUR poll, compared to 24 percent for Gonzalez.

The Oct. 9 gubernatorial debate marks the first in a series of three televised debates ahead of the Nov. 6 general election.

The candidates vying for governor of Massachusetts will also debate on Oct. 17 at 7 p.m. WGBH news will host that hour-long debate and Boston Public Radio hosts Jim Braude and Margery Eagan will moderate.

The final gubernatorial debate will be hosted by a consortium that includes the Boston Globe, WBUR, WCVB, UMass, and the ABC and CBS affiliates in Springfield on Nov. 1, just five days before voters go to the polls for the November 2018 Massachusetts general election. Moderators for the last debate have not yet been disclosed. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

BRIEF

Gaming commissioner chairman resigns, denies charges of bias

Stephen Crosby, who served as chairman of the Massachusetts Gaming Commission since its inception and has overseen the implementation of casino gaming in the Bay State, resigned from the commission Wednesday afternoon, effective immediately.

Crosby's departure comes as the Gaming Commission prepares to make public the findings of its investigation into allegations of sexual misconduct against former casino magnate Steve Wynn and the handling of those allegations by Wynn Resorts, and amid accusations of bias against Crosby.

"Just recently, I have twice been accused of prejudging the outcome of the Investigations and Enforcement Bureau's ongoing investigation regarding the suitability of Wynn Resorts," Crosby wrote in an email informing Gaming Commission staff of his immediate resignation.

He said attorneys for Wynn accused him of having "had already made up my mind against Steve Wynn regarding the allegations of sexual misconduct" and that Mohegan Sun had insisted that he "had already made up my mind in favor of Wynn Resorts in the suitability investigations."

GETTY IMAGES

Crosby referred to lawsuits and threats of lawsuits against the Gaming Commission four years ago, when he was at the center of accusations of bias in the commission's process that resulted in Wynn Resorts securing the Boston area casino license. He said he expects the commission's objectivity will be challenged, even if he were to recuse himself from the Wynn deliberations but remain on the commission.

"I simply cannot let my involvement in these critical deliberations be used by others to hamper the Commission's ability to do its work, or to undermine the confidence of the public in that work," he wrote in the letter, which was sent to staff Wednesday. "There has never been a shred of truth or accuracy to any charge of bias, favoritism, corrupt practice, ethics violations, or prejudgment in my execution of this job." STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Brett Kavanaugh denies accusation by third woman

A third woman on Wednesday accused Brett Kavanaugh, President Donald Trump's U.S. Supreme Court nominee, of sexual misconduct in the 1980s, further inflaming an already contentious Senate confirmation process. Kavanaugh immediately denied the allegation.

The woman, Julie Swetnick, detailed her allegation in a statement to the Senate Judiciary Committee a day before the Republican-led panel is set to hold a high-stakes hearing in which Kavanaugh and Christine Blasey Ford, who has accused him of a sexual assault in 1982, will testify.

"This is ridiculous and from the Twilight Zone," Kavanaugh said in a statement released by the White House. "I don't know who this is and this never happened."

Swetnick is represented by lawyer Michael Avenatti, who also represents adult-film star Stormy Daniels in a lawsuit against Trump to void a nondisclosure agreement under which the president's former personal lawyer paid her $130,000 not to discuss her alleged relationship with Trump more than a decade ago.

"This is ridiculous and from the Twilight Zone."
Brett Kavanaugh

Speaking to reporters in New York, where he is attending the annual U.N. gathering of world leaders, Trump said of the new allegation, "I think it's ridiculous." On Twitter, Trump called Avenatti "a total low-life" and "a third rate lawyer who is good at making false accusations." Avenatti responded on Twitter, calling Trump "a habitual liar and complete narcissist."

In her statement, Swetnick said she attended more than 10 house parties in the Washington area from 1981 to 1983 where Kavanaugh was present. She described gang rapes she said occurred in which boys would line up to rape incapacitated girls.

GETTY IMAGES

She also said she witnessed efforts by Kavanaugh and others "to cause girls to become inebriated and disoriented so they could then be 'gang raped' in a side room or a bedroom by a 'train' of numerous boys," adding she remembers boys including Kavanaugh getting in lines to take part in these rapes.

She did not identify the individuals directly involved in those assaults.

Reuters was not immediately able to verify her accusations. Swetnick and Avenatti did not immediately respond to requests for comment. An attorney for Judge Kavanaugh said he denied Swetnick's allegation.

In an interview with Fox News on Monday, Kavanaugh was asked whether he ever participated in or was aware of any gang rape at a party he attended. "That's totally false and outrageous. I've never done any such thing, known about any such thing," Kavanaugh responded.

Supreme Court appointments must be confirmed by the Senate, and Trump's fellow Republicans control the chamber by a narrow 51-49 margin, meaning Republican defections could sink his nomination. The controversy has unfolded ahead of the Nov. 6 congressional elections in which Democrats seek to take control from the Republicans.

Trump chose Kavanaugh, a conservative federal appeals court judge, for a lifetime job on the top U.S. court in July after the retirement of Justice Anthony Kennedy. Kavanaugh's confirmation would cement conservative control of the Supreme Court, as Trump moves to shift the high court and the broader federal judiciary to the right.

A committee vote on his confirmation is due on Friday, with a final Senate vote as early as Tuesday. REUTERS

Amazing concert cruises to help keep your summer alive

From the Kiss Kruise to Kesha's weeklong party at sea, here are the best concert cruises to check out as the weather gets colder.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Now that all of the summer festivals have wound down, it's time to prepare for the harsh unforgiving East Coast winter.

Here are four concert cruises you can check out to ease you into your post-festival season hangover.

The Kiss Kruise: VIII, Decades at Sea!

When: Oct. 31 — Nov. 5

Millions of members of the Kiss army are hanging their heads low now that their faithful leaders are calling it a day with their final tour. Luckily, Paul Stanley, Gene Simmons and current members Tommy Thayer and Eric Singer will be suiting up for one more voyage on their last annual "Kiss Kruise." The voyage will set sail from Miami, Florida and make stops in Key West, Florida and Nassau, Bahamas, over this weeklong trip at sea with three performances by the band. Other artists throughout the trip will include ex-KISS members Ace Frehley and Bruce Kulick, Vintage Trouble, the Dead Daisies, Lucifer and many more.

For tickets and lodging, head over to thekisskruise.com.

The Soul Train Cruise

When: Jan.20-27

Fans of vintage soul — and working on their tans in the winter — will enjoy this cruise with some of the living legends of the genre. Headlined by Gladys Knight, George Clinton, the Ohio Players, Morris Day and the Time, and none other than Smokey Robinson, this cruise will leave from Fort Lauderdale, Florida, and stop in Amber Cove, Dominican Republic; San Juan, Puerto Rico; and the island of Half Moon Cay. The cruise will include "Soul Train"- style dance-line competitions, artist Q&As, games shows, and many more activities.

For tickets and lodging, head over to soultraincruise.com.

ISTOCK

The Outlaw Country Cruise

When: Jan. 27-Feb.1

The Outlaw Country Cruise not only has one of the most stacked alt-country lineups of any festival around, but will also provide you with an amazing cruise to help you escape the harsh East coast winter. Leaving from Tampa, Florida, and stopping at both Great Kay and Nassau in the Bahamas — the festival will have some special performances by The Drive By Truckers, Lucinda Williams, Steve Earle and the Dukes and the Old 97's. Guests will also be able to enjoy an on-deck casino and special artist conversations with Sirius XM DJ's like the cow-punk legend Mojo Nixon ("Elvis Is Everywhere") as well as the creators of the Adult Swim show "Squidbillies."

For tickets and lodging, head over to outlawcountry-cruise.com.

Kesha's Weird & Wonderful Rainbow Ride

When: Feb. 17-21

Now that she is free to perform again, Kesha is taking to the high seas for a weeklong cruise dubbed "Kesha's Weird & Wonderful Rainbow Ride." Setting sail from Tampa, Florida, to Nassau, Bahamas — the festival will feature performances from Kesha, Girl Talk, Matt & Kim, Betty Who, "Queer Eye's" Jonathan Van Ness, and many more. Kesha will also be hosting a lip sync battle called "Lip Sync for Your Lifeboat." We don't know if this means you will have to lip sync to get your own lifeboat as you are thrown overboard, but it will be a blast finding out!

For tickets and lodging, head over to keshasrainbow-cruise.com.

What to watch for when Patriots take on Dolphins

The Patriots welcome the AFC East leaders in Week 4 action.

JULIAN EDLOW
sports@metro.us

When the 3-0 Miami Dolphins travel to Gillette Stadium on Sunday, the 1-2 Patriots will be up against something that hasn't happened to the franchise in 213 consecutive games: a three-game losing streak.

The Patriots are already two full games behind Miami in the AFC East standings entering Week 4. The last time another team owned a two-game lead in the division? That'd be Week 8 of the 2002 season — the only time in his career that Tom Brady failed to reach the postseason as the starting quarterback. Yes, the 2008 Patriots missed the playoffs, but they went 11-5 behind Matt Cassell after Brady tore his ACL in Week 1.

We're in nearly unprecedented territory for the Pats. On their seventh two-game losing streak of the Brady era, New England will look to avoid its second three-game losing streak in that same span.

Here are three things to watch for Sunday in Foxborough.

Tom Brady and the Patriots look to get back on track at home against the Dolphins. GETTY IMAGES

CAN THE PATS SLOW DOWN RYAN TANNEHILL?

Over the last two games, the Patriots have allowed a combined 638 passing yards and six touchdowns to Blake Bortles and Matthew Stafford. In the 26-10 defeat in Detroit, New England got dominated in time-of-possession, essentially watching the Lions offense on the field for two-thirds of the contest.

Tannehill is arguably playing better than any quarterback New England's faced this season, going 54-for-74 for 687 yards and seven touchdowns with just two interceptions. Miami's offense has five legitimate threats at receiver, possessing deep threats to exploit the Patriots' secondary, and a possession receiver to extend drives — former Patriot Danny Amendola leads Miami with 11 receptions.

The Patriots and Lions each had 10 drives on Sunday night, so Detroit doubling New England's time-of-possession is alarming. The defense must find a way to get Miami off the field early and keep it from grinding clock.

WILL WE SEE THE PATS ADJUST THE PLAY-CALLING?

New England's made a point of getting the ball in the hands of first-round pick Sony Michel during this two-game losing streak, and it hasn't been successful. The running back's seen 26 touches, many seeming forced, and gained just 90 total yards.

Michel's splitting snaps with James White, whom Brady went out of his way for postgame on Sunday, to mention to the media that he believes White should be playing more. White has 191 yards and two touchdowns on 27 touches this year, so his lack of usage doesn't make sense. Fewer head-scratching handoffs to Michel and more spreading the ball around could be key.

From a personnel perspective, we may see Josh Gordon make his team debut on Sunday, which would make for an interesting twist in the offensive game plan.

CAN BRADY AND GRONK CARRY PATS TO VICTORY?

If all else fails, it'll be interesting to see if the Patriots' two best players can will this team to a much-needed victory. After connecting seven times for 123 yards and a touchdown in Week 1, this duo has only hooked up on 6-of-9 targets for 66 yards and failed to score.

Miami is notorious for getting burned by opposing tight ends, most notably Gronk, who went for 82 yards and a pair of touchdowns the last time he faced the Dolphins. This tandem will need to get back on track if the Patriots are going to avoid being on the wrong side of history.

PATS FACING MUST-WIN ALREADY

OPINION

DANNY PICARD
@DannyPicard

Sunday is the most important regular-season game the New England Patriots have had in a long time. It's a must-win game. And it's only Week 4.

The 3-0 Miami Dolphins come to Gillette Stadium as one of only three undefeated teams in the league. The other two are the Kansas City Chiefs and the Los Angeles Rams.

The Patriots, meanwhile, are 1-2 and have lost their last two games, in Jacksonville in Week 2 and in Detroit in Week 3.

We all knew the schedule was going to be tough, especially right out of the gate. But a 1-2 start? I didn't see that coming. Maybe 2-1, but not 1-2.

After looking horrible against the Jaguars two weeks ago, I fully expected the Patriots to have one of their typical bounce-back games against the Lions on Sunday Night Football last week. Instead, things looked even worse.

Now, here we are, about to watch Tom Brady do battle against a divisional rival that's in first place in the AFC East. Even if the Dolphins weren't in first, I still wouldn't feel great about this game. I don't care where it's played, I just never feel comfortable about a game against Miami.

Factor in the way the Patriots have looked so far this season, and it only adds to the anxiety that I currently have with this Patriots team.

I'm not going all Trent Dilfer on you. I believe the Pats can still be a good football team and have success this year. But that needs to start Sunday at 1 p.m. in Foxboro with a win over the Dolphins.

There's no other way. You can't begin the season 1-3. Because after Miami, the schedule doesn't get any easier against teams like Kansas City, Green Bay, Minnesota, and Pittsburgh, just to name a few.

If you ask me, the Patriots' coaching and play-calling has been horrible. Again, people will point to the lack of talent on both sides of the ball. But come on. They still have Tom Brady and Rob Gronkowski on offense. They still have Stephon Gilmore, Devin McCourty, and Dont'a Hightower on defense. And what, we're just going to act like the Patriots don't rely on a "next man up" approach all of a sudden?

I don't care if they have to force the ball to Gronkowski in quadruple coverage 25 times on Sunday, the Patriots need to stay aggressive with their offensive play-calling against a Miami pass defense that allows the third-most pass yards per game at 288. They also need to draw up some disguised blitzes on defense, and turn this thing around, now.

The Patriots have had early-season struggles before. You don't need me to give you a history lesson on that. But I'd be lying if I told you that this one doesn't feel a little different. Maybe I've been brainwashed by all the offseason rumors and reports of the organization's internal demise. Or maybe it just actually does look different.

Whatever the case may be, it has to change on Sunday against the Dolphins. Because the last time the Pats lost three straight was in 2002, when they finished 9-7 and missed out on the playoffs a year after winning their first Super Bowl.

I never say this in September, but I'll say it now: This is a must-win game for the New England Patriots, and the most important regular-season game the organization has had in a long time.

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES (-4) @ TENNESSEE TITANS

Carson Wentz was solid in his first start since Week 14 of last year, giving the Eagles' offense a much-needed boost against the Colts last Sunday. If Jay Ajayi and/or Alshon Jeffery return against the Titans, this unit will be firing on all cylinders.

Things are trending the exact opposite direction for Tennessee, who are 2-1 despite quarterback Marcus Mariota not being able to grip a ball properly. They were fortunate to prevail in a 9-6 snoozefest in Jacksonville last Sunday, but now their run-heavy offense will have to deal with Philly's rush stoppers, which is the stingiest squad in the league through three games.

Despite averaging fewer than 20 points per game, the Eagles are tops in the league in time of possession. Expect them to grind out a win and cover in the Music City.

The pick: Eagles -4

NY JETS @ JACKSONVILLE JAGUARS (-7.5)

This is a big spread for a game in which the betting total is 38.5 points, but the Jaguars look like the right side.

Sam Darnold has been shaky under center at times, and he'll face his toughest assignment yet as he travels to Jacksonville. Darnold doesn't have a perimeter weapon capable of beating cornerback Jalen Ramsey on a regular basis. The Jags are a little vulnerable against the run (21st by YPG), but Isaiah Crowell and Bilal Powell have been held to an average of 74.5 YPG in the last two weeks.

Blake Bortles need only manage the game, not win it. His defense should help him gain the upper hand in the field position battle throughout.

While they've struggled to start the year, you should take the Pats. GETTY IMAGES

Jacksonville continues to trend positively in spite of last week's clunker; they're 4-1 ATS in their last five, and 4-2 ATS in their last six at home.

The pick: Jaguars -7.5

MIAMI DOLPHINS @ NE PATRIOTS (-7)

The Patriots have dropped two straight, but both of those games were on the road. New England has been highly successful at home lately, posting a 7-3 ATS record in their last 10 games in Gillette Stadium. In fact, Bill Belichick and company have won their last eight home games by an average of over 14 points, per oddsshark.com.

The Dolphins will be tested for class as they travel to Foxboro on Sunday. They've beaten the Titans, Jets and Raiders, all teams that may finish under .500 this year, to get to 3-0. And all three victories were decided by one possession. Miami's been a terrible bet as an underdog, dropping five of their last six ATS. Expect that trend to continue as Tom Brady and the Patriots attempt to right the ship.

The pick: Patriots -7

NEW ORLEANS SAINTS (-3) @ NY GIANTS

The Saints (2-1) have delivered uneven efforts through their first three games, but the Giants (1-2) have looked worse against inferior opponents. They scraped by a now 0-3 Houston squad that looks lost and was more than happy to turn the ball over at home and help Eli Manning and company leave with a win. Before that 27-point outburst, New York scored 28 combined through two weeks.

Now the Giants' mediocre defense (13th by PPG) faces their most daunting assignment of the year in Drew Brees and his assorted weapons. Odell Beckham Jr. might have himself a day, but expect New Orleans to prevail, especially if a track meet breaks out.

The pick: Saints -3
